VICTORY SCULPTURE
35th Street and Martin Luther King Jr. Drive

Date of construction: 1927, 1936

Sculpture: Leonard Crunelle
Architect for base: John A. Nyden

At the close of World War I, movements were begun within the black community to honor the valorous achievements of the Eighth Regiment of the Illinois National Guard which served in France under the 370th U.S. Infantry. Although a memorial tablet was placed on the Eighth Regiment Armory honoring members who died in service, and the street upon which the Armory was located was renamed in 1922 in honor of Lieutenant George L. Giles, the highest ranking officer to be killed in action, the black community began petitioning for the erection of a suitable monument befitting the valor of the "Fighting Eighth." By the mid 1920s proposals for erection of a permanent monument in the parkway of Grand Boulevard in the vicinity of 35th Street were met with stiff opposition by the South Park Commission which had control over the boulevard system. The South Park Commission maintained that there was no space available for such a monument, but relented after the Chicago Defender began actively promoting a "vote no" campaign against the commission board, urging blacks to defeat any project backed by the South Park Commission until due recognition of the community's war heroes was realized. The monument was funded jointly by the South Park Commission and the State of Illinois, and sited to replace a fountain in the boulevard parkway at the corner of Grand Boulevard (now Martin Luther King Jr. Drive) and 35th Street, immediately across from the offices of the Liberty Life Insurance Company. The design was prepared in 1926 and consisted of a circular grey granite shaft with three symbolic inset bronze sculptural panels finished with a rich black patination portraying a black soldier, a black woman symbolizing motherhood, and the figure of Columbia, holding a tablet which recorded the locations of the regiment's principal battles. The sculpture was designed and executed by French-born sculptor Leonard Crunelle (1872-1944), a former pupil of noted Chicago sculptor Lorado Taft. The base and architectural setting of the monument was designed in collaboration with Chicago architect John A. Nyden. The completed monument was dedicated on Armistice Day, November 11, 1927 in an extensive public ceremony. In 1936, the figure of a uniformed World War I black doughboy was added to the top of the monument, the sculpture also being the work of Leonard Crunelle.

The sculpture is one of the most famous landmarks of Chicago's black community, and is the site of an annual Memorial Day ceremony when the surviving members of the "Fighting Eighth" gather to honor the memory of their fallen comrades.
